

Andy Cameron a member of mission IMPROVable gets up close and personal with the Courier photographer.

From left to right: Frankie Cusimano, Nathan Jansen, Andy Cameron, Bryce Wissel are members of mission IMPROVable.

Frankie Cusimano jumps to get down to the stage.

Photos and text by
Amanda Kellermann
Photo Editor

Students watch the improv show at the Compass Hill, outside the cafeteria.

Jokes fly

Opening with the mission impossible theme song, the group's members come from all over the place. One rolls down the hill, one uses a skateboard from a member of the audience and one appears from inside the cafeteria.

On Compass Hill, the group preformed for an hour and had about four different improv scenarios. Each involved a unique twist of audience participation. One montage involved turning a person's one syllable name into a rhyming rap. An audience was selected to beat box in the background.

Mission IMPROVable is the nation's fastest improvisational show. It originated with six members performing in Massachusetts, in 1996. After a couple of years the team went to Chicago, the city the group acclaims as the world capital of improv comedy.

...the seat... Now there are over 40 members of the improv team. They average 200 shows a year touring colleges and high schools across the nation. Carrying themselves as a bunch of agents, they have to complete a mission before the show ends. Their improv style is similar to "Whose Line Is It Anyway?" where the team draws on their audience for inspiration.

by...
of their pants